Diverse and inclusive

When a company talks about diversity it often feels contrived, so we let the numbers do our talking.

For us, diversity and inclusivity isn't a slogan; it's measurable, accountable, and woven into the way we operate every day.

How long is our interview process?

The process might slightly vary across roles and business units, a member of the talent acquisition team will keep you across the process at every stage.

1. Screening: lets kick things off

This is our “hello!” moment. A quick pre-screen chat (usually on MS Teams) that helps us get a feel for your vibe, motivation, and experience. It also gives you the chance to ask us anything you want. Think of it as a warm-up lap before the main race.

2. Video interview: meet the crew

Your first-round interview will be a video call with two friendly faces typically your future manager and someone from the wider team. It’s structured enough to keep things on track, but relaxed enough to feel like a real conversation. We’ll chat about your recent wins, your skills and how you’d fit into our team and culture.

3. Assessment: show us your superpowers

If you’re applying for a technical or specialist role, we might ask you to complete an assessment. This could be a case study, a task or a psychometric test depending on the role. You’ll usually have between 24 hours and a week to complete it. No pressure, just a chance to shine.

4. Final interview: the home stretch

This is the last lap! Whether it’s in-person or virtual (we’ll let you know), this round is all about team fit, values alignment and how you work. We want to make sure you’ll thrive here and that you’re excited to join us.
